

Leverhulme Trust Early Career Fellowships 2023

Applications are invited from suitably qualified researchers in the early stages of an academic career, who wish to base a postdoctoral research project in the Ruskin School of Art at the University of Oxford. It is expected that, as in previous years, the School will be able to support two applications to the Leverhulme Trust.

The School will hold an internal competition to decide which application(s) will be put forward under the scheme, so applicants should not approach the Leverhulme Trust directly until departmental support is confirmed in writing. Being selected by the School does not ensure the award of a Leverhulme Early Career Fellowship, but if you are selected to go forward to prepare an application to the Leverhulme Trust, we will work with you to ensure as strong a submission as possible.

The Trust believes that the development of an academic career is best served by gaining experience at different institutions. Applicants who have not already moved institutions in the course of their academic career (i.e. between their university of study and proposed host institution) should nominate a new host institution, or otherwise demonstrate clear evidence of the academic and/or personal reasons for remaining at the same institution, such as access to highly specialist equipment or a highly specialised research team.

It is hoped that the Fellowship would provide a platform for subsequent career development within the university sector or other research-active arts organisations. The objective is for Fellows to undertake a significant piece of publishable research during the tenure of the award, and the project put forward should therefore not be a reworking or mere extension of the candidate's doctoral research project.

Eligibility Criteria

Leverhulme Early Career Fellowships are aimed at supporting those at a relatively early stage of their academic careers but with a proven record of research. Applicants must have submitted their doctoral thesis no more than four years before the closing date, i.e. not before 23 February 2019, unless there has been a career break; or no earlier than 23 February 2018, "if their work has been impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic". Fellowships are tenable for three years on a full-time basis. Requests to hold the award part-time over a proportionately longer period may also be considered. Candidates must have a doctorate or equivalent research experience; and must either have a UK degree or have been employed in an academic position within the UK for at least 4 months prior to applying. However, applicants must not hold, or have held, a permanent academic position in a UK university or comparable institution. Those currently registered for a doctorate must have submitted their thesis by the closing date of 23 February 2023.

Further details about the scheme, including the eligibility requirements, can be found on the Leverhulme Trust's website at <https://www.leverhulme.ac.uk/early-career-fellowships> .

Expressions of interest are due at midday on Friday 6 January, 2023.

The application process

Candidates are asked to indicate in their Expression of Interest their preferred mentor, but candidates should not expect input from the proposed mentor at this stage. Candidate preferences will be taken into consideration, though the School may nominate a different mentor according to availability and expertise. Candidates selected to go forward to the next stage will be put in contact with a mentor after the internal selection process has been completed. The mentor will provide support in the preparation of a bid to the Leverhulme Trust. For further information please see <http://www.rsa.ox.ac.uk/people>

Candidates must submit by email (subject line: ‘Leverhulme ECF 2023’) the following application materials by email to administrator@rsa.ox.ac.uk no later than midday (12pm) on 6th January, 2023.

1. A two-page draft statement of research (which may use similar headings to that in the Leverhulme Trust’s Application Guidance Notes);
2. A one-page CV including education, publications, any awards, thesis title and examiners;
3. A 100-word abstract summarising the research for a general audience;
4. One academic reference (ideally from the thesis supervisor). This can be sent either with your submission or directly by the referee to the email address provided above, but must be submitted to the same deadline;
5. Practising artists should provide online access to up to 12 images, or a short excerpt of their film or music, as appropriate. Please include the link to your work in your draft statement of research.

If there are any circumstances which may have impacted on your research to date that you wish to be taken into account - for example a period of maternity leave, family commitments, illness, or other exceptional circumstances - please include a separate statement, which will be received by the School’s Director of Research, Professor Daria Martin. Any such statements will be treated in confidence.

All applications will be considered by a sub-committee of the Ruskin School of Art’s Research Committee.

For any queries about the application procedure, please contact the Ruskin’s Head of Administration (Dr Richard Sykes), via administrator@rsa.ox.ac.uk. Please use the subject line ‘Leverhulme ECF 2023’.

Candidates nominated by the School will be required to submit the final version of the application to the University’s Humanities Division. The Humanities Division will notify nominated candidates of the deadline, and a member of the Divisional Research Facilitation team, together with an academic mentor from the Ruskin, will provide assistance and advice during the preparation and submission of the application to the Leverhulme Trust.

The Leverhulme online application process will open on 1 January 2023 and its deadline for the 2023 competition will be 4 p.m. on 23 February 2023.
